

SEA-EU Call for student-led projects

Are you a Bachelor, Master or PhD students with an innovative idea for strengthening student collaboration across Europe? Are you keen to help shape the future of European education from a student point of view? The SEA-EU Alliance has now opened a call for proposals for student-led projects that aim to improve education and strengthen student collaboration among the SEA-EU partner universities. Successful projects will receive up to 4000 Euros.

The aim of the call is to encourage students to identify original solutions to societal challenges in the following topics:

- Inclusion, diversity and gender equality
 - Sustainability and climate equity
 - Multilingualism and plurality
 - Digitalisation and digital forms of collaborations
 - Social entrepreneurship and positive impact on the community/society.
- Inclusion, diversity and gender equality: the Alliance focuses on achieving a more active participation in the university life of those social groups which are usually underrepresented and removing barriers increasing the students' level of awareness about gender and diversity issues.
 - Sustainability and climate equity: SEA-EU is conscious of the damaging effects of climate change and promote the exchange of ecological practices at the different levels of the university life – from green mobility to green research.
 - Multilingualism and plurality: SEA-EU enhances the effective use of English as the main mode of communication within the alliance, while at the same time promoting multilingualism by encouraging respect for and knowledge of the local languages of the alliance. The alliance devotes efforts to strengthening multilingualism, while also ensuring an effective use of English as a means of communication, scholarship, teaching and learning within the Alliance and beyond.
 - Digitalisation and digital forms of collaborations: the alliance aims to create new digital ways of collaboration among students in research and teaching, sharing tools and platforms among the universities and fostering digital competencies among students to consequently prepare them for the labour market.
 - Social entrepreneurship and positive impact on the community/society: The SEA-EU alliance aims to build bridges with the society and local partners to face global common challenges together. Through innovative approaches, like service-learning, students will develop critical thinking, problem-solving skills, management and entrepreneurial skills. Cooperations with non-academic partners like NGOs will be developed. The alliance is strengthening the link to society, also promoting open educational resources, open science and open data to communities and the general public to expand the SEA-EU university model across borders

Projects must be carried out in collaboration with at least 1 student from at least 1 of the other eight SEA-EU partner universities. Additionally, each team must be supported by a supervisor who is an employee of the University of Gdańsk. To find project partners from other universities you can fill in the project matching form.

Are you interested in learning more about SEA-EU, the organization hosting this competition?

SEA-EU is at the forefront of a European-wide initiative to redefine higher education. As part of the European Commission's "European Universities" program, our consortium of nine coastal universities is committed to fostering innovation and collaboration. Our members include the University of Cádiz, the University of Western Brittany, Kiel University, the University of Gdańsk, the University of Split, and the University of Malta. In January 2023, we expanded our network to include the University of Algarve, the University of Parthenope in Naples, and Nord University.

Our vision is to establish a seamless academic environment where students, researchers, and staff can move freely between our partner institutions. By developing a new model of education and exchange, we aim to strengthen the competitiveness of European higher education, promote student and staff mobility, and ensure the highest standards of teaching and research. Our work is also guided by the principles of sustainability and European values such as human rights, democracy, and equality.
